

Citing the Source of a Name, Event, or Fact

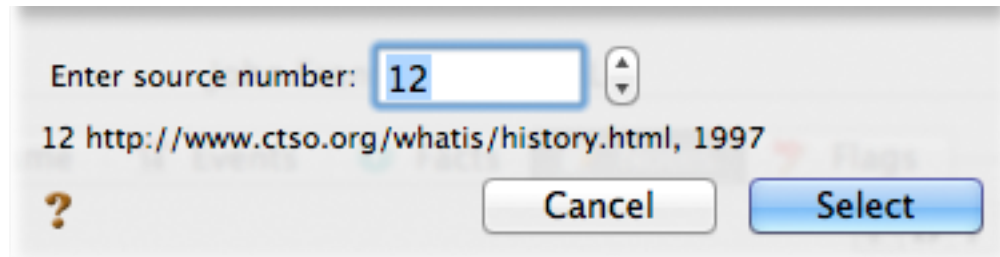

To document (or cite) the source of a name, event, or fact, follow these steps...

- Click the Add Source menu button (see the illustration below). This displays four basic choices...

- Create a new source: Choose the type of source from the New Source submenu. After you select the type of source desired, the Source window appears with a new, empty source record wherein you enter information for the source.
- Drag and drop a source from the Sources sidebar into the Source Citations list: To pick a source that has already been entered but isn't one of the last 20 cited, click Add Source and choose Drag Source From the Sidebar. The Sources sidebar will appear with a list of the sources already entered. Just drag and drop the correct source into the Source Citations list (under the names, events, or facts). For a shortcut, press Shift+Command+S.

- Choose a source by number: If you're familiar with the numbers of your source records, click Add Source and choose Enter Source Number. For a shortcut, press Shift+Command+N.

- choose a source you've recently cited: To use one of the last 20 sources cited, click Add Source and choose it from the bottom section of the menu.
1. If necessary, make an entry in the Detail field.

The Detail Field

The detail is typically something very succinct and specific, like a page number, that connects a source to a piece of information. Detail is optional. You might think of sources as being more general, and detail as being more specific. For example, a book might be a source. A particular page number in the book would be the detail.

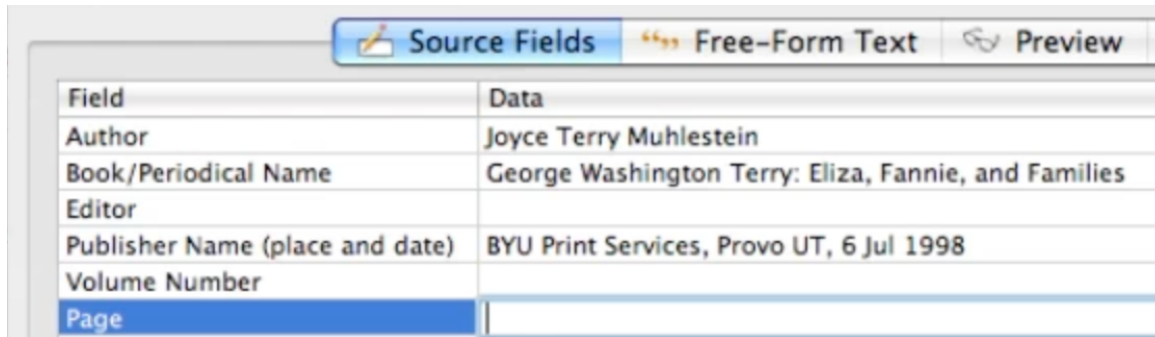

Census Source example:

Field	Data
Title (quoted, Title...	1930 Census
Locality	Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minnesota
Date	17 Apr 1930
Media Type	microfilm
Location of Source	Ancestry.com
Date Viewed	4 Sep 2014
ED	Roll: 1098; Page: 30B; Enumeration District: 0225; Image: 366.0; FH...

Below the table are three buttons: Add Field..., Delete Field, and Save Default...

At the bottom, there is a 'Source Type:' dropdown menu set to 'Census', a page number '686' with up/down arrows, and a 'Done' button.

Book Source Example:

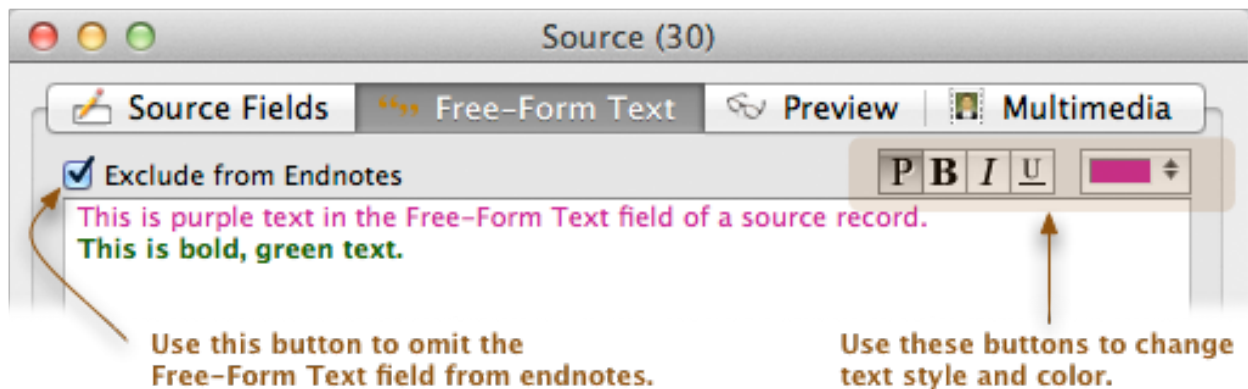

Field	Data
Author	Joyce Terry Muhlestein
Book/Periodical Name	George Washington Terry: Eliza, Fannie, and Families
Editor
Publisher Name (place and date)	BYU Print Services, Provo UT, 6 Jul 1998
Volume Number

Free-Form Text Field

Each source record has, at a minimum, one Free-Form Text field. Some people prefer recording all source information in a single free-form text field. Other people prefer a more structured approach, using different fields for different bits of information. Reunion offers both — allowing you to use free-form source records, structured source records, and/or both.

To see or edit the Free-Form Text field, click the Free-Form Text button in the Source window.

This section contains one scrolling text field, holding up to 30,000 characters of text.

The font applied to free-form text is specified in the General Preferences. To apply different text styles and color to free-form text, use the Text Style and Text Color menu buttons.

To exclude the free-form text field from endnotes, check the Exclude from Endnotes button in the Free-Form Text section of the Source window.

Sources such as birth certificates provide one example of a situation where this exclusion might be handy. You could capture the origin of the document (archive, file number, volume, etc.) in the structured source fields and enter the full text of the birth certificate in the Free-Form Text field. For reports, you could then exclude the Free-Form Text field (in this case, the text of the birth certificate) from the endnotes.
